5 audience is very supportive. We cheer along if someone is struggling or a person might join in to help them out.

4 The work expells a lot of energy and starts a great deal of laughing. When going through a session of Karate it's like we exercise the demons from the week, ready to start the new week fresh. It brings us together and also allows us to give in to our own guilty pleasure for the entertainment of everyone else.

6 It's a bit like confusion or being publicly disgraced but when you control it feels empowering.

Sunglass - I bought the sunglasses for our honeymoon. We were going to Croatia and I didn't have any sunglasses that fitted so I thought it a good idea. I looked in many shops in town and came across them over in a shop that sells prescription glasses.

7 They're brown on the outside of the frame and light blue on the inside. The lenses are tinted grey but also make things look slightly redder. The brand is based in Great Britain and the sunglasses are unisex. I had great difficulty choosing a pair but there was second to fit my shape & face.

8 When I bought them the shop assistant treated me like a patient rather than a customer. She adjusted the arms of the sunglasses by bending and bending them, so they could be more comfortable. I would use to this type of service from a shop and enjoyed it, although felt it was quite strange at the same time.

While on our honeymoon I was inevitably caught with the sunglasses, being that in their case when not using them. I found them quite funny but enjoyed wearing them. Almost two years later Claire and I went on holiday to the south of France with Marina.

This holiday was quite different from our honeymoon as we always had to put Marina first. We could still do most of the things we wanted to but we had to ensure she was fed, not too hot and got enough sleep.

We decided to go on a tour of the Le Cobusier public housing building in Marseille. It was on our last day so we had to pack the night before and leave our bags in the Airbnb we rented.

While outside the building we noticed Marina had seen an explosive pan, which had gone everywhere. This had happened a few days before so we knew how to handle it. We quickly turned the buggy in to a charging station and stripped her off.

Unfortunately I had hooked my sunglasses in the back of my t-shirt. Upon lifting Marina at my baggy the sunglasses popped out of the t-shirt. I thought I was steady on a storm but in fact I was stamping my
